- an innovative idea pitching competition on Clean and Sustainable Energy in Indian scenario considering feasibility of implementation in current condition and socio-economic viability.

Abstract:

In India still the major source of energy is fossil fuel like coal. Although the government has set a target of net zero Carbon emission for the country by 2070 and that included reducing emissions to 50% by 2030. But the current scenario is far away from it. There are so many challenges are there in a huge and diverse country like India. However, brainstorming innovative idea considering feasibility of implementation in current condition and socio-economic viability can lead to the way to fulfilling the dream. Instead of top-down approach, a bottom-up approach will be effective for this purpose. As most of the power sectors are devoid of an R&D cell and as there is a gap between industry and academia this type of competition will be acting as a bridge and at the same time can develop a realistic road map for Clean and Sustainable Energy in India.
